

Ann Landis is the Program Manager for the Yes We Must Coalition, helping to guide research, facilitation and management of Coalition collaborative projects and initiatives and helping to grow participation in the collaborations undertaken by the Coalition by member institutions.

Dr. Landis has over 25 years of experience in higher education. She served as Executive Vice President and Provost at Thomas University from 2006-2016, providing strategic leadership for Academic Affairs and Enrollment Management, including program growth and management, development of online, satellite, and international programs, community academic partnerships, and operational matters relating to the academic mission. She also served in the roles of Division Chair, Associate Dean, and Dean of Arts and Science as well as being a faculty member in English and Humanities.

Prior to her service at Thomas University, Dr. Landis taught English and Humanities at Bluffton University in Ohio and at Florida State University. She holds a PhD in Humanities from Florida State University, a MA in English from James Madison University, and a BA in English and Education from Eastern Mennonite University.